

FILM EDUCATION TO RESTRUCTURE

17 August 2010: Film Education announced today that Ian Wall is to stand down from his role as managing director of the organisation to take up a new position of Director of Education.

Explaining the move, Wall said:

“With more and more demands to produce educational content for the industry, and with the demands made by the educational establishment on our time, it is logical that Film Education splits the role I currently hold into business and educational responsibilities.

My real expertise lies in the educational development of the organisation and I look forward to working with a new managing director who can take us into our next 25 years and help us develop the organisation even further.”

Chair of Film Education, Barry Jenkins OBE, added:

“Ian has made Film Education into an organisation of which the film industry can be proud. The quality of the materials, events and training that they offer is second to none.

We really want Ian to focus on this area in future and hope that removing the day to day running of the company from him will allow him to further develop the cutting edge resources and training events over the coming years.”

A new managing director of Film Education will be recruited in autumn 2010.
